Sharks Help *Scientists *Discover *Forest

Have you ever seen a shark? It's a scary fish with lots of sharp teeth. Recently, sharks have helped scientists find a forest on the *ocean floor. Scientists were looking for *seagrass in the ocean. Seagrass is a plant that grows deep underwater. That means it's not easy to study. But the scientists had an idea. They *caught some sharks and put cameras on them, so they could see what the sharks *saw.

When the scientists watched the videos, they were *amazed. They saw a huge forest of seagrass on the ocean floor. Seagrass is important because it can *absorb lots of CO₂. Too much CO₂ in the air and water is the main cause of *global warming.

If we can learn more about seagrass, we can better understand how to fight climate change. All thanks to those helpful sharks!
