In my opinion, the trend of college professors to teach in English is definitely correct and essential. The reasons are as follows. To begin with, as an inhabitant of this global village, it is of utmost importance for Taiwanese students to connect with the world. Not only can students gain more international perspective, but they can also be geared up for the opportunities to exchange their knowledge with students from all around the world. On top of that, there is a spectrum of academic information held by the developed countries such as the U.S. or Germany. Only if we learn the English terms can we acquire the precious knowledge which is crucial to the development of our own country. Moreover, students who are professional in English may study abroad after college, which cultivates their profession further more. All in all, I think this is the only access for Taiwanese students to higher achievements.

If my classes in college are taught in English, it will not be easy for me to keep up with the professors. Thus, I've come up with several plans to ensure my learning quality. Firstly, I will read the related documents prior to the class. This way, I will have the class with at least a little knowledge rather than know nothing. Besides, I will prepare a device to record the professors' words if allowed so as to fortify the information I have gained after class. In addition, I will listen to news covered in English every morning in order to strengthen my English listening skill. After all, it doesn't bode well for me if I can't understand what the professor is saying. Aside from all the plans elaborated above, it is the most basic but imperative that I improve general English skills. Managing to follow through with these plans, I'm convinced that I can survive the classes in college if they are taught in English.
